

H/23/94924 – 33 Goslings Turning, Bursledon, SO31 8LP.

Context.

Goslings Turning is the relatively new development built in the green fields that separated Bursledon Windmill, a Grade II* listed heritage asset, from Providence Hill. This part of the site was included in the conservation area when it was revised in 2011 prior to any hint of development here.

In view of the windmill's national importance the important view from Providence Hill down by the first houses was largely preserved by maintaining the building-free wedge between the two halves of this development. This goes a little way toward keeping the illusion of a rural setting for the very important old building, Bursledon Windmill.

The Proposal.

This property is on the southern edge of the eastern half of this development with its ridgeline on an axis just east of north-south away from the 'viewing wedge' for the windmill. As this aspect is away from the windmill and not seen in the same view of it from the general public domain, it is acceptable.

Conclusion.

As long as the panels are all black and fixed as close as possible to the roof surface, no objection.

12.04.2023.

Tim J S Dyer, B.Sc.,Dip.Arch.(Birm), Grad.Dip.Conservation(AA), RIBA.

Built Heritage Consultant.