Hi Mollie,

This is the sign off for the fieldwork element of this project, and confirmation David is happy for us to backfill.

The analysis, report and publication are still to follow.

Many thanks,
Niomi

Hi David,

Yes, the big darker one was excavated in the eval, I believe Pavel thought they might be different features at the time due to his keyhole view. But Katherine has established the features and relationships and will record appropriately.

I have attached some crude annotation of where the trench was in relation, the light fill is the backfill from the trench slots,

I hope that helps, though I appreciate it all looks brown,

Best

Niomi

Good afternoon Niomi, gosh it looks like the Somme. But the weather has been rather wet and wild and I am not one to judge given that I sit in my warm dry office.

In principle I am happy for you to back fill where the excavation has fulfilled the WSI. I do note the features on one of the photographs that are untackled,

Can you confirm that these have also been section?

Thanks

David

Hi David,

I just thought I'd give you a last update, the site conditions are awful, the rain has been relatively consistent, and unfortunately, I think this is it for the foreseeable. The team have done really well all things considered.

I have attached an up to date plan, and some photos of the last few features.

The pit cluster was identified in the eval has been fully exposed, relationships identified, and profiles obtained. I believe some finds came out of the eval slots and I think we have a handful more.

The pit with the hand shovel on the top is the pit identified in the same trench; however, it was not based in the eval, it has been now.

Again, we aren't seeing the same charcoal rich fills as the features in the northern area but we are moving down the slope.

We've attempted to "finds grab" the updated features.

Can you confirm you are happy for us to backfill?

Many thanks,
Niomi
